

Setting up an online learning experience for students can be a daunting and overwhelming process. There are many approaches you can take and resources you can use. The important thing to remember before you start, however, is how you can make it easier for your learners to obtain the knowledge sets and skills practice they need to complete your online course - and have an enjoyable experience along the way. Good learning experiences online result from good design and planning. Good design and planning are the products of careful and thoughtful project management. Before launching into an online learning project, consider your learning objectives and outcomes, what your learners need and want and if there are any best practice example out there already to learn from.
